Balancing Act: We Need Engineers in Research, Not Just in Industry

By Richard France for The Higher Education Network

The problem of the UK's engineering shortage is well known, but the answer could lie in guiding more brilliant minds towards academia.

I'm not disputing the fact that we need great engineering minds working in industry, but we also know that world-class research- which we have a long history of in the UK- plays a key role in economic growth and improves the health and wellbeing of society.

Professional Development

Graduate School Professional Development Programs: Lunch and Learn: Managing Crucial Conversations

When stakes are high, opinions vary and emotions start to run strong, casual conversations become crucial and sometimes difficult. Ironically, the more crucial the conversation, the less likely we are to handle it well. The consequence of either avoiding or fouling up these conversations can be severe. When we fail a crucial conversation, every aspect of our lives can be affected, from our careers, to communities, to relationships, to our personal health. As we learn how to
