Postdoc Corner

Notre Dame Postdoc to Walter Reed

Sara E. Alger completed her doctoral work in Cognitive Neuroscience at the City University of New York. Her research in graduate school centered on the relationship between sleep and memory, specifically focused on the role of daytime napping in taking memories from short-term to long-term storage.

Dr. Sara Alger

For the last 5 years, Dr. Alger has been working with Dr. Jessica Payne in the Department of Psychology, primarily conducting research in the Sleep, Stress, and Memory Lab. Her current research focuses on the impact of emotional salience on how information is remembered and how sleep preferentially preserves this type of adaptive information over less valuable information. Beyond looking at sleep and napping as a whole, she is particularly interested in digging into the underlying sleep-based mechanisms involved in memory consolidation and performance. She also is interested in how sleep, memory, and the relationship between sleep and memory change as we age and when those changes begin to happen. This research is supported by a NRSA postdoctoral fellowship that was awarded by the National Institute on Aging.

Dr. Alger recently accepted a research position as a Psychophysicologist and will be working as a contractor with the Behavioral Biology branch of the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research in Silver Spring, MD. In this position, she will continue researching the role of sleep and the impact of sleep loss on both physical and cognitive performance, with the goal of helping to keep our military safe and healthy as they serve.

How to Effectively Cope with Stress During the Postdoc Years

Office for Postdoctoral Scholars

The postdoc years are an exciting time to further your career and develop your professional identity, but they can also be filled with a number of stressors. Going on the job market, moving to a new town (or even country), balancing work and personal life, finances, and the uncertainty of what lies ahead can make the postdoc years an especially stressful time. This informational session will cover how to identify common signs of stress and how to effectively cope with times of stress and uncertainty using evidence-based strategies. We all are likely to experience the stress of the postdoc years at one time or another, and we hope this informational session will help start this important conversation about stress in academia and provide you with the resources to
