Postdoc Corner

ND Postdoc to Tenure Track Faculty

In August, Dr. McKenzie Rees joined the Cox School of Business’s faculty at Southern Methodist University. Dr. Rees received her PhD in 2015 from the University of Utah, and from there joined the Management Department as a Postdoctoral Researcher in the Mendoza College of Business at the University of Notre Dame.

While at the University of Notre Dame, Dr. Rees worked with Dr. Ann Tenbrunsel on her work on unintentional unethical behavior. Together, Drs. Rees and Tenbrunsel worked on several projects that examined the situational cues that blind people to the ethical elements in the situation. Their most recent projects examine these situational cues in relation to negotiation and sexual harassment.

In addition to her research, Dr. Rees taught in the MBA program in the Mendoza College. Her class was an elective that taught students the skills necessary to be an effective negotiator. This class focused on many of the psychological obstacles that negotiators face in their negotiations, how to overcome those obstacles, and how to get the most from the negotiation while also helping their partner get what they want.

Dr. Rees attributes much of her drive to stay in academia to her experience at Notre Dame. She says this about her experience: “My time at Notre Dame helped me develop further as a researcher. Dr. Tenbrunsel pushed me to think about my questions on ethical behavior from new lenses, making them more intriguing for me to research, and more interesting for others to learn about. Additionally, Dr. Tenbrunsel and the other members of the Management Department showed me what it was like to have an academic family—I enjoyed my
