Miguel J. Romero, ThD, MDiv.

Miguel J. Romero is a Moreau Postdoctoral Research Fellow with the Department of Theology at the University of Notre Dame. He earned his B.A. from Colorado College, his M.Div. from Fuller Theological Seminary, his Th.M. from Duke University, and his Th.D. in moral theology from Duke University.

Miguel's research interests include Catholic social teaching and the liberation theology movement, philosophical and theological accounts of disability and mental illness, North American Hispanic Catholicism, and the theology of Thomas Aquinas. Miguel is particularly interested in traditional Christian accounts of the virtuous response to human suffering.

He is author of "Liberation, Development, and Human Advancement: Catholic Social Doctrine in Caritas in Veritate" Nova et Vetera, vol. 8, no. 4 (2010) and "Aquinas on the corporis infirmitas: Broken Flesh and the Grammar of Grace" Disability in the Christian Tradition, eds. John Swinton and Brian Brock (Eerdmans, 2012). His current book project, Destiny of the Wounded Creature: St. Thomas Aquinas on Disability is a focused recovery of underappreciated aspects of the 13th century theologian's theological anthropology. The book describes the significance of our creaturely limitation, vulnerability, and individual woundedness within Aquinas's understanding of the good and flourishing human life.

Miguel is married to Dr. Heather Romero, a geriatric neuropsychologist and Alzheimer's Disease researcher, affiliated with Duke University Medical Center. Miguel and Heather have four children under the age of seven.
