Watch Out, MBAs! Ph.D.s Are After Your Jobs

By Erin Zlomek for Bloomberg

Els van der Helm tried to sign up for a corporate recruiting event through the University of California at Berkeley's business school last year, but she was turned away. "I got the response, 'Oh, actually this is just for the MBAs,' which makes sense," says Van der Helm, who graduated from Berkeley last May with a Ph.D. in psychology and now works as a junior associate for McKinsey. The MBAs "pay a lot of money to get their time with the recruiters," she says. "Everything is very nicely laid out for them. For Ph.D.s, it's not."

Now, some of the largest and most active recruiters of Ph.D.s are Amazon.com, JPMorgan Chase, Citigroup, Bank of America, IBM, General Electric, Intel, Johnson & Johnson, United Technologies, Boeing, and Pfizer.

How not to write a PhD thesis

By Tara Brabazon for Times Higher Education

My teaching break between Christmas and the university's snowy reopening in January followed in the footsteps of Goldilocks and the three bears. I examined three PhDs: one was too big; one was too small; one was just right. Put another way, one was as close to a fail as I have ever examined; one passed but required rewriting to strengthen the argument; and the last reminded me why it is such a pleasure to be an academic.

Concurrently, I have been shepherding three of my PhD students through the final two months to submission. These concluding weeks are an emotional cocktail of exhaustion, frustration, fright and exhilaration. Supervisors correct errors we thought had been removed a year ago. The paragraph that seemed good enough in the first draft now seems to drag down a chapter. My postgraduates cannot understand why I am so picky. They want to submit and move on with the rest of their lives.

Career Services

The Importance of Understanding the Emotions of Potential Employers

By Joseph Barber for Carpe Careers

In addition to working with graduate students and postdocs at the University of Pennsylvania on their career exploration and development, I also teach an Applied Animal Behavior and Welfare course at Hunter College of the City University of New York as an adjunct professor.

Since job searching is a discrete set of human behaviors that can be defined and even measured, I find several topics discussed in my animal behavior course to be relevant when talking about career-related topics with students and postdocs at Penn. It's important to realize that employers see the world differently than you do and to understand their specific emotional states.

are prone to procrastination, and still others suffer from excessive perfectionism. In each case, the end result may be high stress and long hours as a deadline approaches, but those are just the symptoms. To solve the problem, you need to look at the root cause, and then tailor the solution to your specific issue.

Too often, we think of "getting organized" as a one-approach-fits-all endeavor, which leads people to accumulate calendars, planners, and journals. In a burst of determination, we use them for a short period of time and then set them aside when it turns out that they don't actually help. So instead of going shopping for the latest planning tool, take the time to identify your biggest time-use issue.

Events and Workshops

Learning Inside Out with Portfolios in Sakai

Normally students submit papers and projects from the outside in a gated learning management system

(Sakai) for a lone instructor to grade. What if there was a way to push the products of student learning from the inside out-- to publish it to peers and external audiences? This workshop will provide a guided tour of a digital learning environment to show how ePortfolios can be integrated with Sakai to make learning and skills visible outside the classroom and increase authenticity by identifying targeted external audiences. Participants will sketch a design for their digital learning environment and be able to take advantage of campus support resources.

EAP Workshop: Conferences and Networking

Conferences are often fun, motivating events that will push your research forward and allow you to interact with other researchers in your field. But just as often, conferences cause anxiety, because we are all told of the importance of using them to "network" but find the process of doing that intimidating or mystifying. This workshop will decode the conference as an event, discuss what networking means, and provide you with strategies to successfully utilize conferences as networking opportunities.

Date: Wednesday, April 12, 2017
Time: 5:15PM - 6:30PM
Location: 302 DeBartolo Hall

Please register for the workshop here. If you have any questions concerning the EAP Workshop Program, please contact the CSLC at (574) 631-5881 or email EAP postdoc Ryne Close.
