Financial Wellness Series: Job Offers and Negotiations
Mendoza, Graduate Career Services
Serving up Knowledge - Open to postdocs

During this session, students will learn about navigating the negotiation process. It's perfectly normal to be nervous during salary negotiations, but if you don't actively engage in the process you may leave money on the table. By developing effective transaction skills, you can get what you deserve in any professional situation.

Spouses and partners are welcome. All participants are encouraged to bring laptops or tablets. Dinner will be served.

"Teaching Naked" with José Antonio Bowen
President of Goucher College and author of Teaching Naked and Teaching Naked Techniques

This workshop distills the latest research on how students learn into tested techniques and best practices that work. Decades of research have brought an explosion of knowledge about how human evolution has shaped the way we process, think, and remember. Technology also provides new ways for students to receive their first contact with material and enhanced opportunities to connect and create community, better ways to ensure that students are prepared for class, and new options for the sequence of learning encounters and activities. Teaching is largely a design problem, and we need to design our classes for the brain in the body. This workshop will suggest lots of easy techniques to improve student learning while providing a process to guide the creation of better modules and courses. It follows the design process in the Teaching Naked Techniques book.

Date: Friday, April 5
Time: 2:00 to 3:30 p.m.
